Homework Q&A™ Brings A New Model to Helping Children With School Work

Sugar Land, Texas, September 7 - Homework Q&A is proud to announce the launch of their new service, online assistance with homework and school assignments for middle school-aged students. Homework Q&A is disrupting traditional tutoring models by allowing students to connect virtually one on one with an educator, for as little as 15 minutes, to give them targeted help with homework assignments and test preparation in small intervals of time specific to their needs and requirements.

Before the pandemic many families struggled with busy schedules, evolving school curriculum, and managing varying parent-child personalities and communication styles. Since COVID families have been further disrupted and traditional learning models are even more challenged. The noise of our past combined with the state of our current reality, and a dose of innovation is what led to the birth of Homework Q&A.

“Homework Q&A’s model will prevent children from falling behind, and getting frustrated with their school work,” said Michelle Weaver, Founder, and CEO. “One thing I know for sure is, many families experience some version of my story...every day and what led me to shift my focus from Corporate America to helping families, children specifically, navigate the complexities of figuring out that nagging school assignment, when you wish you had a few minutes to connect with your teacher”.

Homework Q&A sets itself apart from other tutoring models by offering small increments of time to zone in on specific homework or test needs. When you think of how easy it is to order a car through Uber in an instant or find a personal style for a home-away-from-home with Airbnb, you can now think of Homework Q&A providing immediate service with ease for homework.

Our mission is to empower students with the educational resources to build confidence in the classroom and beyond at affordable price points so that no children are ever left behind.
